SAMUEL C. COBB.

Society of the Cincinnati:

ITS FOUNDERS AND ITS OBJECTS.

THE SOCIETY OF THE CINCINNATI was established at the close of the Revolutionary war, in May, 1783, by officers of the American army, just previous to its disbanding, in the cantonment at Newburgh, on the Hudson River.

It was designed to be a "Society of friends, to endure as long as they shall endure or any of their eldest male posterity, and, in failure thereof, the collateral branches who may be judged worthy of becoming its supporters and members."

It was founded on certain "immutable principles," viz., to preserve inviolate the rights and liberties secured by the war, to promote and cherish union and national honor between the States, to render permanent the cordial affection subsisting among the officers, and especially to assist such officers, or their families, as might be in need.

The Society was divided into State Societies.

All officers of the American army, who had resigned with honor, after three years' service in the capacity of officers, or who had been deranged by the resolutions of Congress, upon the several reforms of the army, or who had continued to the end of the war, were entitled to become parties to this institution, on subscribing one month's pay, and signing their names to the general rules in their respective State societies; and the "eldest male branches" of such officers as had died in the service were also entitled to membership on the same terms as children of actual members.

By virtue of resolutions adopted in 1854 and 1856, each State society has now the right to regulate the terms and qualifications for the admission of members, "provided that admission be confined to the male descendants of original members (including collateral branches as contemplated by the original constitution); or to the male descendants of such officers of the army or navy as may have been entitled to admission, but who failed to avail themselves thereof, within the time limited by the constitution; or to the male descendants of such officers of the army or navy of the Revolution as may have resigned with honor, or left the service with reputation, or to the male collateral relative of any officer who died in service without leaving issue."

The male descendants of those who were members of State societies which have dissolved may also be admitted into existing societies, on such terms as those societies may prescribe.

The sum of $700, by the present rules of the Massachusetts Society, is to be paid by each person admitted under the above rules, whose ancestor was not a member of the Society.

The Massachusetts Society was incorporated by Act of the Legislature in 1806. It holds an annual meeting at Boston on the 4th of July. Its business affairs are transacted by the officers and a Standing Committee, who hold regular meetings in March and November of each year, at which times applications for membership are considered, and aid is voted to beneficiaries out of the income of the Society's fund.

Boston, July, 1880.

Note.— Applications for aid or membership, and information concerning the Society, may be made to
